

Delaware PSC Supports Del Tech Pathways to Prosperity Program

On Monday, November 28, 2016, Delaware Public Service Commission Chairman Dallas Winslow joined Delaware Governor Jack Markell, Governor-elect John Carney and other dignitaries at the Delaware Technical Community College Stanton campus to highlight the Pathways to Prosperity program.

The Pathways to Prosperity program is offered at each Del Tech campus and offers career training in 12 high demand job areas, include energy efficiency. Students learn skills in energy management which will lead to greater energy efficiency in buildings, cost savings and improved environmental impact.

Chairman Winslow emphasized that jobs in the energy efficiency field will continue to grow as cost savings and environmental impacts become more important to businesses and residential customers.

The program is partially funded by a $720,000 donation from Delmarva Power. The donation was one of the conditions of the recently approved merger between Delmarva Power's parent company, PHI, and Exelon Corporation. As part of the merger settlement agreement, the Delaware Public Service Commission approved funding for various workforce development initiatives, energy efficiency projects, and direct refunds to customers.

Created in 1949 to regulate investor-owned public utilities, the Delaware Public Service Commission works to ensure safe, reliable and reasonably priced electric, natural gas, wastewater, and water services for Delaware consumers.
